COURSE GUIDE & PRICING

In 2018, Lisa Lashes School of Music launched a innovative learning programme in Northampton teaching students of all ages and abilities what it takes to start out in the music industry.

The school has been a runaway success story leading to a second location in Manchester and other cities planned for summer 2019.

One of the key successes is the unique and innovative ways that the course is able to engage students that have had difficulty in traditional learning environments.

From this we have developed a new under 16 programme specifically focused on re-engaging students as an alternative to exclusion from schools and colleges.

This document gives an overview of the course content and shows some examples of how we use music and creativity to reach learners in ways that the national curriculum cannot.

Pricing is included to give an indication of the costs involved in sending students to our school and the sort of numbers that are needed.

The whole team has worked tirelessly over the last 12 months to develop this groundbreaking new course and cannot wait to share it's successes with other learning institutions.

Alternative to exclusion

Since the first cohort of learners walked through our doors back in July 2018 we have been working very closely with Inspector Daryl Lyon (Early Intervention, Integrated Offender Management), CIRV Northampton, The Police and The Educational Inclusion and Partnership Team to design programmes that fit the individual needs of our learners.

We take this responsibility very seriously as we often work with students that are at a high risk of behavioral difficulties.

Exclusion from school can have a huge impact on learners. They can feel like they have been stripped from society and are more likely to become involved in crime and gang related activity.

Music is a universal language that almost all young people can relate to in some way. We've have great success in using this as a tool to connect with people who have been otherwise unreachable.

We use creativity and artistic expression to build trust with leaners, this leads to better social skills and ultimately reintegration with the education system or employment.
